Alsace-style tarte flambée

Tarte flambée is a French speciality from the Alsace region. The basis for the tarte is a very thinly rolled out bread dough. Traditionally the dough is topped with raw onions, bacon and crème fraîche. In earlier days tartes flambées were baked in wood-fired ovens before the bread went in to make use of the oven's intense initial heat. They also served as a kind of temperature gauge. If the tarte became too dark too quickly the baker would wait a while before putting the bread in. The name (flambé literally means flamed) derives from the flames in the oven that were still glowing when the tarte was placed inside.
